Abstract (Basic): US 20030164628 A1

NOVELTY - The method involves arranging plastic compact disc (CD) holders (100) in a storage compartment (74). A cover (64) is set to open and close storage compartment. Holders (100A) for first-aid-treating contents are connected with CD holders in storage compartment. The cover can be used as an armrest and when in open condition, a user has same extent of accessibility to first-aid-treating contents as the CDs.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION - A storage site is established between an auto (102) driver and a front passenger's seat constituted of walls bounding the storage compartment with top edges bounding an opening into the storage compartment.

USE - For manufacturing readily accessible-to-use first-aid procedures in vehicle.

ADVANTAGE - Provides first aid kit primarily for vehicle use that is convenient to store during non-use and provides easy access during use. Can be readily accessed when treating minor injuries.

DESCRIPTION OF DRAWING(S) - The figure shows the perspective view illustrating the practicing of the first aid kit component.

Dentist in a BoxThe Problem...

50% of children are affected by traumatic dental injury.

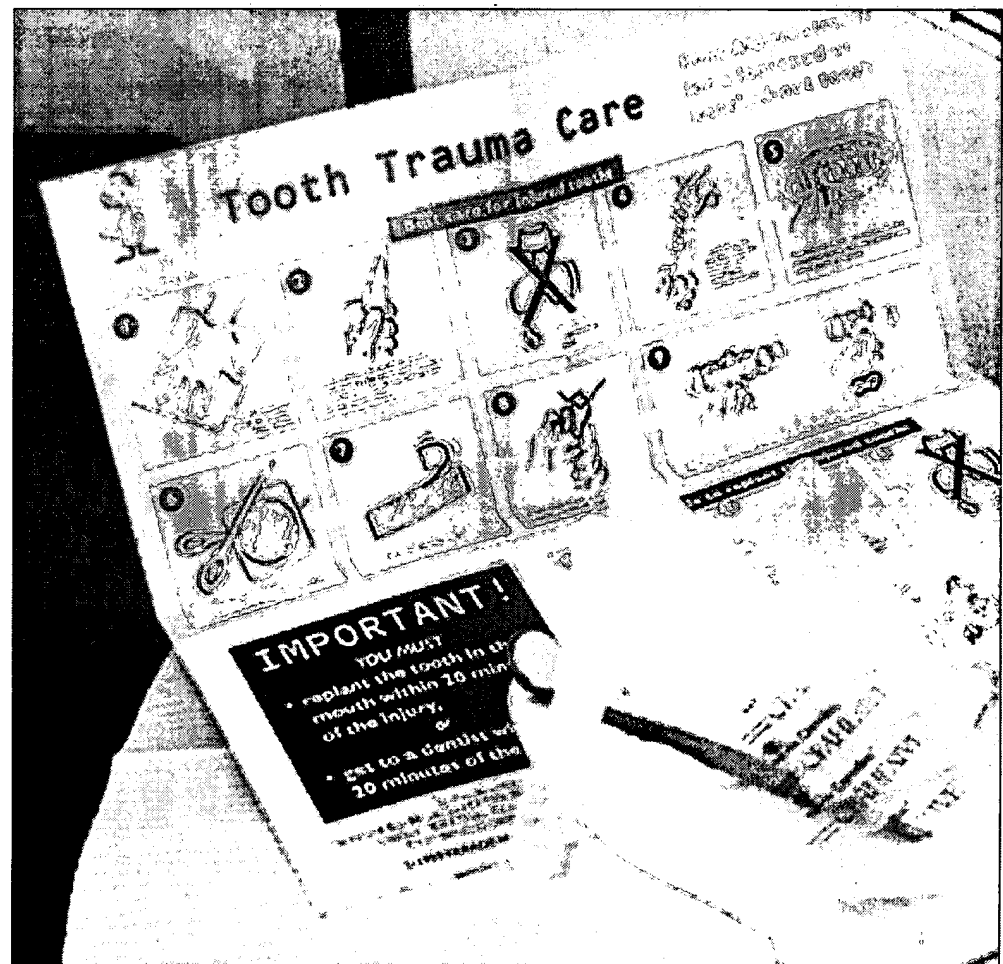

A first aid kit for dental emergencies is not available despite surveys of Australian and overseas medical practitioners

- an alarming lack of knowledge in the initial management of dental injury amongst all groups compounded by
- fear about the exposure to blood-borne diseases such as HIV and Hepatitis.

Sports players sustaining dental injury are often assisted by well-meaning but dentally inexperienced staff relying on materials and relevant instructions for managing this type of injury.

The Solution...

Dentist in a Box !!

- Therapeutic Goods Administration (Australia) listed
- devised by a Melbourne dentist
- assumes no medical or dental knowledge
- about the size of a CD case
- contains simple emergency items, instructions which are easy to follow
- designed to reduce blood-borne infection and provide safe first aid care for dental injury anywhere!
